THE LEHIGH REVIEW, now in its twentieth year, is a research journal that serves as a space to exhibit the intellectual and artistic endeavors of Lehigh University undergraduates. Thoughtful, engaging, and beautifully orchestrated, the essays and artwork that appear inside this issue and the journal's celebration of twenty years of excellence come together under the theme of "Progression and Reflection." From the essays to the artwork, all of the pieces inside this edition demonstrate imagination, original insight and a mastery of the subject. They will encourage you to reflect upon both the impressive advancement they demonstrate and the possibility for progress that they inspire.

REVIEW

progression and reflection

Each year for the past twenty, Lehigh University has published The Lehigh Review an entirely student-produced journal of the arts and sciences. Each issue contains some of the best scholarly and artistic accomplishments by Lehigh Undergraduates.

Any academic writing or artwork by a Lehigh undergraduate may be submitted. The Review does not ordinarily accept fiction or prose.

All submissions should reflect sustained intellectual and aesthetic engagement in any of Lehigh's many fields of study. We are especially interested in work that draws from the content or methodology of more than one discipline. The Review expects students to submit work that exceeds a mere synthesis of existing sources. The Review publishes submissions which demonstrate a student's engagement with and love of their discipline.
